Select the true statement about reference types.

A reference type variable can refer to multiple objects at one time.

A reference type is the same as a value type.

A reference type variable uses value equality.

A reference type variable refers to a location in memory.

👏 Correct! Instead of an actual value, references point to a location in memory.

Continue